"BUT AH! THE CRUEL SPOILER CAME."

OFT I beheld the lovely fair, But ne'er without a pleasing glow, As Nancy's beauty none could share,

So none can now describe her woe! A heart serene as summer's morn, A mind unsullied as the rose,

A face no charms could more adorn, A person form'd for soft repose;

And virtue, firm as Dian's arms
Was Naney's once—But ah! the thought!
Strephon beheld her lovely charms, He manly form her glances sought. Love kindled in her artless breast,

The flandring lover fam'd the fire, I the him alone she could be blest. His bosom flam'd with warm desire,

His solemn air, enchanting voice,
Altured her in the deep laid snare—
"How would my heart," said he, "rejoice,
"If I was bound to you my fair.

"Oh! could you feel what rends my heart,
"What love for you my breast consumes;
"With me you'd join, no more to part, " Till Heaven's eternal mandate comes." Her crimson checks her heart betray'd,

Her glowing eyes bespoke her flame-"Your love," said she, " is ill repaid, "When I confess I feel the same."

" Angelic fair !" Strephon replied, "Hymenial joys our love shall grace,
"Heav'n has decreed you for my bride;
"But shall we part and not embrace."

Poor Nancy's bosom, love possess'd, Sensations felt unknown before; She sunk, resistless, on his breast!
And innocence was hers no more!!!
